VICE ADMIRAL ROBERT R. MONROE, U.S. NAVY
DIRECTOR, DEFENSE NUCLEAR AGENCY

Vice Admiral Monroe is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Monroe of Knoxville, Tennessee. He enlisted in the Navy in 1945 as a seaman, and shortly thereafter began electronics training. In 1946 he entered the U.S. Naval Academy on a fleet appointment.

Graduating from Annapolis in 1950, Ensign Monroe spent his first four years at sea in the destroyers USS Forrest Royal (DD-372) and USS Strong (DD-758), where he served primarily in operations department billets. Both ships operated extensively in the Korean theater. From 1954 to 1956 he commanded the minesweeper USS Reedbird (MSC(0)-51) operating off the East Coast of the United States.

Lieutenant Monroe's first tour ashore, from 1956 to 1958, was in the Officer Planning Section of the Bureau of Naval Personnel in Washington. He returned to sea as Secondary Battery Officer and the Missile Officer of the cruiser USS Boston (CAG-1)-- then the world's only guided missile ship. After two years' postgraduate study at Stanford University, for which he received a Master's degree in International Relations, Lieutenant Commander Monroe in 1962 was ordered to the guided missile frigate USS Farragut (DLG-6) as Executive Officer.

From 1964 to 1966 Commander Monroe commanded the guided missile destroyer USS Charles F. Adams (DDG-2). During this period the ship operated frequently in the Mediterranean and Northern European waters, as had the previous two ships. He subsequently was assigned to the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Systems Analysis) in the Pentagon for a three-year tour.

In 1969 Captain Monroe placed the amphibious assault ship USS Juneau (LPD-10) in commission, and served as Commanding Officer through 1970, engaged in Southeast Asia operations. During 1971-72 he served in Washington as Executive Secretary of the CNO Executive Board.

Selected for promotion to Flag rank 1972, Rear Admiral Monroe was immediately assigned as Director of Systems Analysis for the Chief of Naval Operations, and served for a year in that billet. He went to sea as Commander, South Atlantic Force, U.S. Atlantic Fleet from 1973 until early 1974, commanding Task Force 86 throughout UNITAS XIV.

In 1974 he was assigned command of the Operational Test and Evaluation Force, the Navy's sole independent command for operational testing of new weapons systems--air, surface, sub-surface.

He was promoted to Vice Admiral and assumed command of the Defense Nuclear Agency on 1 April 1977.

Vice Admiral Monroe is married to the former Charlotte Anderson of Knoxville, Tennessee. They have three children-Bob (23), Nancy (21), and Susan (19). Bob is a 1976 graduate of the U.S. Naval Academy, currently assigned to USS Tattnell (DDG-19).
